

Cheryl Checks It Out: Hair Removal

Is there a better way to bust your unwanted fuzz? Five REDBOOK staffers ditched their current hair-removal techniques and tried some new tools.

By Samantha Schoengold Beranbom

Start slideshow ▶◀ 4 of 6 ▶PrintEmailShare ▼

A BROW TWEEZER TRIES THREADING

MELANIE tried threading at Shobha in New York City. "I trust only myself to create a neatly arched, not-too-thin brow shape. I tweeze pretty much any time I'm in my bathroom, so letting my brows grow out for two weeks to thread-able length was hard to do. I shrank in horror at my bushy brows! Shashi, the threader, told me how she planned to fix my lopsided shape (oops!) while keeping the arch I like. Then she drew a length of string, tilted my chair back, and got to work. It felt like a comb being dragged across my skin, removing hairs as it went. A little irritating, a little odd, but

photo credit: Jay Sullivan

Keywords: hair removers, hair removal techniques, hair removal products

